CHIMP INTERVIEW Hard-Hitting Exposé

By Ed Coonce
Bugle Staff Writer

L to R, Melvin and God undercover photo

"We didn't ask to be here, it just happened", said research subject XB 36C, aka "God" in a daring and exclusive underground interview. "I was just sitting in my cage, bandage on my head, scratching fleas, and wondering where my next banana was coming from, when BAM!, it hit me. I realized that there was more to life than this, and I'd better get out of this cage and start earning a living. I sat down for a little talk with Professor Klingst and told him what I was gonna do and he told me, 'You're not alone. Would you like to meet your brothers?' I said sure. The first brother I met was Melvin here, and we hit it off right away."

The chimps, recently responsible for the North Bergen crime wave, have been sequestered in a secret location while authorities consider how or if to prosecute them.

In a daring daylight escape from the North Bergen Correctional Center, Ringo Feen, the notorious bag man and money launderer for the outlawed Shmutzinista rebel group, scaled a 20 foot high fence and leaped onto a passing train.

Passersby testified to investigating NBPD officers that Feen yelled as he was

RESTLESS LEG SYNDROME

Newest Malady Linked to Shmutz Embattled Residents Ask, "What's Next?"

By Marston Tidwell

North Bergen Several hundred patients have been admitted to Mercy Hospital's Emergency Ward this week with symptoms that included uncontrolled twitching in their lower limbs, one-legged jitterbugging, kicking over their heads with one and occasionally both, legs simultaneously.

Frequently, while otherwise sitting quietly, the legs, with no discernible control, will do the complete dance moves, moonwalk and all, to "Thriller". In approximately half the observed cases, the dancing legs will automatically choreograph to "Blame It On The Bossa Nova".

Dubbed "Restless Leg Syndrome" or RLS, the condition is apparently not permanent, but can be dangerous if the symptoms strike while driving or waitressing.

Dr. Biggerstaff

M.B. Biggerstaff, M.D., of the Quaintville Neurology Institute suspects an environmental pollutant as the culprit. "I believe that the organism responsible is a common virus that has mutated after uncontrolled exposure to shmutz.

"We don't have all the hard data in yet", says Dr. Biggerstaff, "but we're fairly certain that this is the origin of RLS. The Center for Disease Control in Atlanta has been falling toward the moving train, "So long, suckers!", followed by "Aaiiiieeeee!"

The NJ Transit train stopped in Hoboken where federal officers boarded and searched for the death-defying financier. After several hours of delay with no apparent sign of the wily and elusive Feen, the restless commuters were allowed to reboard the train and continue on to Bayonne. Feen is considered unarmed but dangerous, and citizens should
